WHAT IS EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE?

- EQ is understanding your own and other people's emotional makeup well enough to communicate effectively, to overcome challenges and to defuse conflict
  - It is not controlling your anger and/or getting along w people

EQ is a sine qua non of leadership…

W/o it, a person can have an incisive & analytical mind, the best training in the world, and endless supply of smart ideas, but he/she still won't make a great leader.

EQ, SINE QUA NON OF LEADERSHIP

Motivation	• A passion to work for reasons that go beyond money and status • A propensity to pursue goals with energy and persistence • Strong drive to achieve • Optimism, even in the face failure • Commitment
Empathy	• The ability to understand the emotional makeup of other people • Skill in treating people according to their emotional reactions • Cross-cultural sensitivity
Social skills	• Persuasiveness • Effectiveness in leading change • Expertise in building and leading teams • Managing relationships • Building networks
Self-awareness	• Self-confidence • Ability to recognize the mood, and emotion of self
Self regulation	• Trustworthiness • Comfort with ambiguity

EQ, SINE QUA NON OF LEADERSHIP

- EQ, comes with the person's nature or life experience?
  - Both!
  - Scientific inquiry strongly suggests that there is a genetic component to EQ
  - Psychological and developmental research indicates that nurture plays an important role

- One thing is certain: EQ increases w age, with the old-fashioned word: maturity!

EQ, SINE QUA NON OF LEADERSHIP

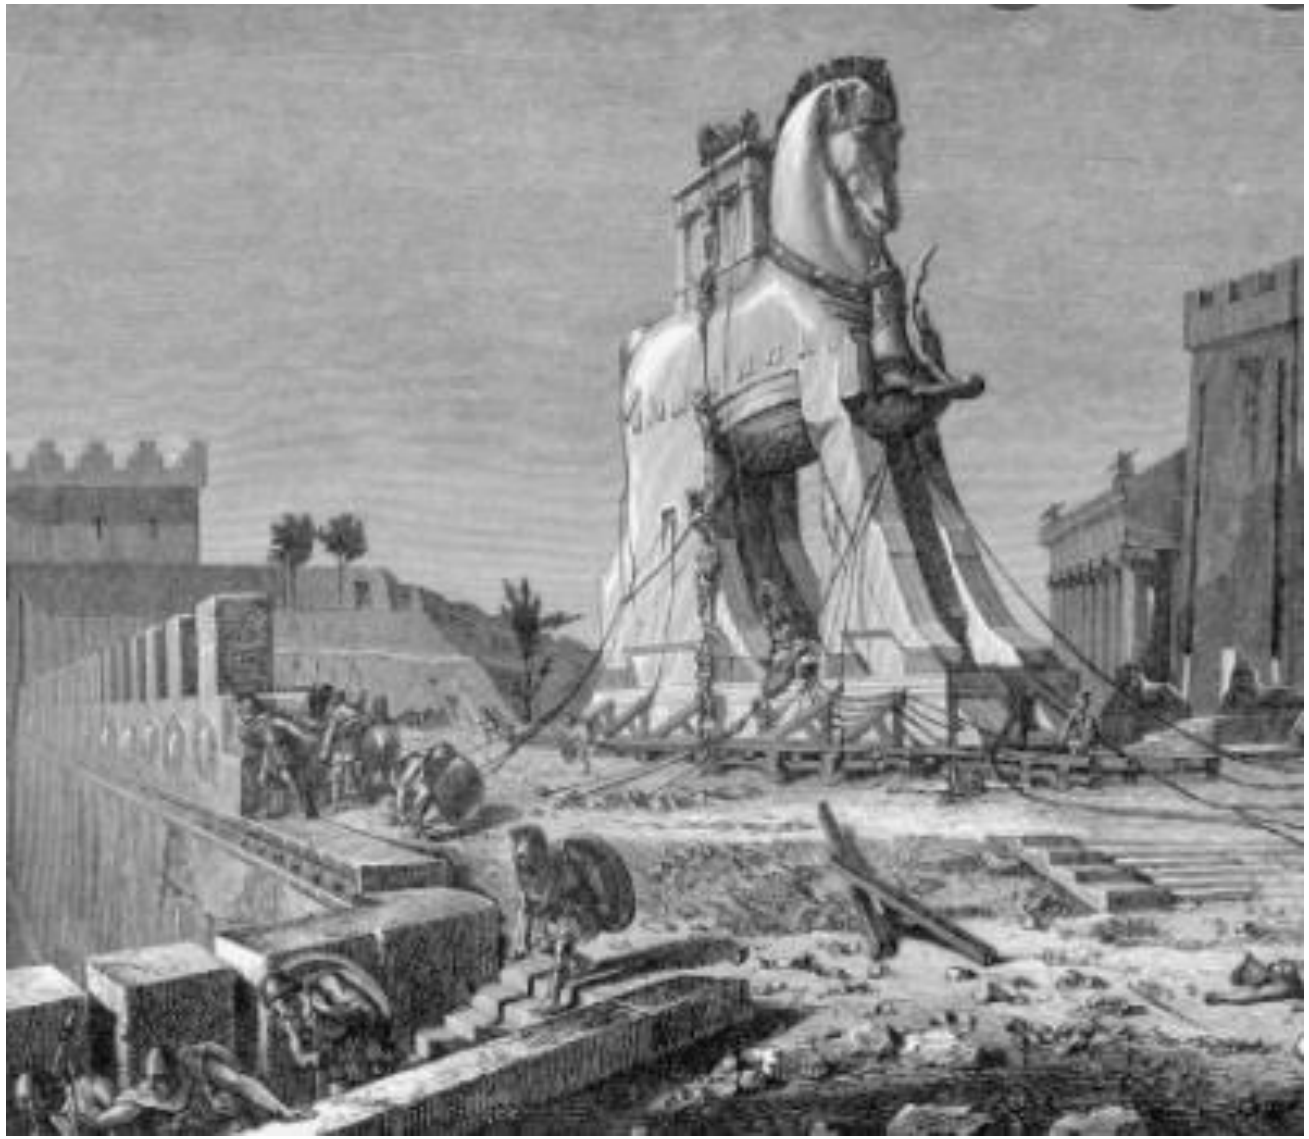

- EQ is born largely in the neurotransmitters of the brain's limbic system
  - Limbic system governs feelings, impulses and drives
  - Limbic system learns best through motivation, extended practice and feedback.

- Neocortex, which governs analytical and technical ability
  - The neocortex grasps concepts and logic.
  - It is the part of the brain that figures out how to use a computer

…CAPTURING THE MINDS, HEARTS & SPIRITS

"The challenge of leadership is to be strong, but not rude; be kind, but not weak; be bold, but not bully; be thoughtful, but not lazy; be humble, but not timid; be proud, but not arrogant; have humor, but without folly." –Jim Rohn, entrepreneur and motivational speaker

TROJAN WAR…

- …Trojans X Greeks
- …Paris took Helen from her husband Menelaus, king of Sparta, brother of Agamemnon
- …took 10 years
- …many heroes; Odysseus, Achilleus, Hector, Paris…
- …the city fell to the ruse of the Trojan War

ODYSSEUS…

- …mental agility & wisdom
- Odysseus;
  - being strictly tied to the ultimate goal, persistence
  - sees the big picture and has a future estimation
  - he manages the perception of others; knows deeply how others see & understand the things
  - builds the complicated/sohisticated opportunities & and threads' network to achieve the goal
  - does not see passion X logic as opposite things
  - is adaptive and flexible to changes, being unexpected

IS STRATEGY CHEATING?

… the basis should be the ethical fundementals

…. have to be judged in the context of society's standards of right and wrong

WHAT IS ETHICAL?

Suppose you are the driver of a trolley car hurtling down the track at sixty miles an hour. Up ahead you see five workers standing on the track, tools in hand. You try to stop, but you can't. The brakes don't work. You feel desperate, because you know that if you crash into these five workers, they will all die. (Let's assume you know that for sure.) Suddenly, you notice a side track, on to the right. There is a worker on that track, too, but only one. You realize that you can turn the trolley car onto the side track, killing the one worker, but sparing the five.

What should you do?

Now consider another version of the trolley story. This time, you are not the driver but an onlooker, standing on a bridge overlooking the track. (This time, there is no side track.) Down the track comes a trolley, and at the end of the track are five workers. Once again, the brakes don't work. The trolley is about to crash into the five workers. You feel helpless to avert this disaster—until you notice, standing next to you on the bridge, a very heavy man. You could push him from bridge, onto the track, into the path of the oncoming trolley. He would die, but the five workers would be saved. (You consider jumping onto the track yourself, but realize you are too small to stop the trolley.)

Would pushing the heavy man onto the track be the right thing to do?

In the summer of 1884, four English sailors were stranded at sea in a small lifeboat in the South Atlantic, over a thousand miles from land. Their ship, the Mignonette, had gone down in a storm, and they had escaped to the lifeboat, with only two cans of preserved turnips and no fresh water. Thomas Dudley was the captain, Edwin Stephens was the first mate, and Edmund Brooks was a sailor—"all men of excellent character," according to newspaper accounts. 1 The fourth member of the crew was the cabin boy, Richard Parker, age seventeen. He was an orphan, on his first long voyage at sea.

From the lifeboat, the four stranded sailors watched the horizon, hoping a ship might pass and rescue them. For the first three days, they ate small rations of turnips. On the fourth day, they caught a turtle. They subsisted on the turtle and the remaining turnips for the next few days. And then for eight days, they ate nothing.

By now Parker, the cabin boy, was lying in the corner of the lifeboat. He had drunk seawater, against the advice of the others, and become ill. He appeared to be dying.

If you were the captain, what would you do?

The captain him with a penknife, stabbing him in the jugular vein. For four days, the three men fed on the body and blood of the cabin boy. And then help came and they were rescued.

The three survivors were picked up. Upon their return to England, they were arrested and tried. They freely confessed that they had killed and eaten Parker. They claimed they had done so out of necessity.

Suppose you were the judge. How would you rule? Put aside the question of law and assume that you were asked to decide whether killing the cabin boy was morally/ethically right & permissible?
