LEADERSHIP & MANAGEMENT

by ÖZLEM YILMAZ

COMMUNICATION MYTH…

- Effective leaders and sales person have one thing in common; they all have 2 ears and 1 mouth, and they use them in that proportion
- It starts w understanding, and that requires listening as much as you talk
  - …listening well is an art form as much as speaking well
  - …the more you talk, the less each word is valued
- Speak well; for the audience (understand), attract the attention, take the interest, close the deal (persuade)
- Write well; for the reader, tell a story (challenge, options, solution), keep it short, keep it positive, supports assertion w facts

JUDGMENT…

- …the ability to combine 'personal qualities' with 'relevant knowledge and experience' to form opinions and make decisions
- …is the core of leadership
- …is what enables a sound choice in the absence of clear-cut, relevant data or an obvious path

JUDGMENT…

- Leaders with good judgment;
  - …tend to be good listeners and readers—able to hear what other people actually mean, and able to see patterns that others do not
  - …have a breadth of experiences and relationships that enable them to recognize parallels or analogies that others miss
  - …can recognize their own emotions and biases and take them out of the equation
  - …remain grounded in the real world; in making a choice they also consider its implementation
- Six basic components of good judgment
- …learning, trust, experience, detachment, options, and delivery

JUDGMENT…

1. Learning: Listen Attentively, Read Critically

- Good judgment requires turning knowledge into understanding
- The devil is in the detail—Many leaders rush to bad judgments because they unconsciously filter the information they receive or are not sufficiently critical of what they hear or read.
- Leaders with good judgment tend to be good listeners and readers

2. Trust: Seek Diversity, Not Validation

- Many leaders bring people on board who simply echo and validate them.

JUDGMENT…

3. Experience: Make It Relevant but Not Narrow

- Beyond the data and evidence pertinent to a decision, experience gives context and helps us identify potential solutions and anticipate challenges. If they have previously encountered something like a current challenge, leaders can scope out areas in which to focus their energy and resources.
  - But if the experience is narrowly based, familiarity can be dangerous.

4. Detachment: Identify & Challenge Biases

- The ability to detach, both intellectually and emotionally, is therefore a vital component of good judgment. But it's a difficult skill to master.

JUDGMENT...

5. Options: Question the Solution Set Offered

- It's not the leader's job to come up with all the options. But she/he can ensure that the management team delivers the full range of possibilities, counteracting fears and biases that cause the team to self-edit. When all the options can be debated, the judgment is more likely to be right.
  - If there isn't anyone, or enough time, get clear about rules and ethical issues, because they will help you filter your choices. Don't be afraid to consider radical options.

6. Delivery: Factor in the Feasibility of Execution

- You can make all the right strategic choices but still end up losing out if you don't exercise judgment in how and by whom those choices will be executed
